Charles K. Arter

he was born into a Cleveland family of wealth did not deter him from pursuing all his numerous activities with energy and a sense of responsibility toward the community in which he lived and prospered.

Charles K. Arter, whose funeral will be this afternoon, was a hard-working lawyer, businessman and civic leader. The fact that which he lived and prospered.

Though nearing 82 years, he had worked until a week ago at his desk in his law office,

Mr. Arter served as president of the Cleveland Chamber of Commerce during the bleak days of the middle 1930s; he served as a director or officer of several manufacturing comdays of the middle 1930s; he served as a director or officer of several manufacturing companies, as a board member for charitable and philanthropic organizations. He enjoyed several hobbies most of his life, including astronomy and photography, and claimed purchase of the first Kodak ever sold in Cleveland.

Death has taken a useful senior citizen of Cleveland.